Dinner at Carmela's Italian Restaurant & Lounge in Kingston now comes with a little Frank Sinatra. And if you know the words, you might even get a chance to sing along. • The restaurant is bringing some vintage charm to Thursday nights with live piano music, guest vocalists and songs made famous by Ol' Blue Eyes himself. • Behind the piano is Steve Lanzillotta, a longtime South Shore performer who knows a thing or two about keeping an audience entertained. Each performance features a different vocalist singing Sinatra favorites while guests enjoy dinner, drinks and, perhaps, a little romance.

There's no cover charge, and the music isn't limited to one night. The series has dates scheduled through January, giving diners several chances to trade an ordinary Thursday evening for something a little different.

And according to Lanzillotta, the audience is welcome to join the fun.

"People can come up and sing if they'd like," he said.

Why Carmela's is bringing Sinatra to Thursday nights

For general manager Courtney Jenkins, Sinatra Night is a way to continue building something Carmela's already has going for it.

"Carmela's has always had a date night feel, and Sinatra is the perfect soundtrack for it," Jenkins said.

"The golden age music brings an elegance to the room, and we wanted to bring that feeling back to Thursday nights, a night when people don't expect to be swept off their feet."

The restaurant has also added Sinatra-themed drinks and specials to go along with the music.

And so far, Jenkins said, the idea is bringing people back.

"The response has been wonderful," she said. "Guests keep coming back, partly because it's a different singer every time, so no two Thursdays feel the same."

What's on the playlist for Sinatra Night?

For Lanzillotta, Sinatra's appeal hasn't faded with time.

"His songs are timeless. He's a one-of-kind guy with a one-of-kind voice," he said. "People of all ages love his music wherever I go."

Some of the Hoboken native's biggest crowd-pleasers include "My Way," "That's Life," "New York, New RAYNHAM — Protections are now in place regarding any data centers that might to locate in Raynham.

By a very wide margin, voters at Special Town Meeting Tuesday, Nov. 17, approved several articles that would place severe restrictions on building data centers in town, including size, power demand, water consumption, and where one can be built — to the point that officials say they believe the new rules will greatly discourage attempts.

It was the town's Planning Board that submitted the data center articles for vote at Special Town Meeting.

"This is a proactive approach, so that we don't have to be reactive," Planning Board member Pamela Menconi told residents at the Special Town Meeting prior to the votes. She said the articles create protections for the town. "The preservation of our town was the focus," Menconi said.

What was voted on?

• Article 16 defines a data center, as well as establishes restrictions regarding location, electrical use, water consumption and noise levels. Under this article, only small-scale data centers are allowed, with electrical demand for the facility being a maximum of 2 megawatts. To put this in perspective, the controversial massive campus of 10 data centers the Kraft Group is proposing to build in Sutton would use a total of roughly 900 megawatts of power, the Worcester Telegram & Gazette reported.

• Article 17 limits where data centers can locate in Raynham to a single zoning district called a "Light Industrial

South Shore Health raised a record $1.36 million at its annual Gala on Oct. 16 to support emergency care programs and services across the South Shore.

Hundreds of community leaders, health care advocates and supporters attended the event, according to a community announcement. The money will support investments in staff, technology and programs used to provide emergency care.

"Our emergency teams are there for patients and families during some of the most critical moments of their lives," said Allen L. Smith, president and CEO of South Shore Health. "The generosity demonstrated at this year's Gala reflects how deeply our community values access to exceptional emergency care close to home.
