Races shaping up under Prop. 50

House candidates jockey for position in revamped congressional districts

The effects of the new voter-approved congressional maps for California are beginning to take shape, and a picture of how Proposition 50 will impact the 2026 campaigns is emerging.

In Los Angeles County, Rep. Linda Sánchez, who represents the 38th Congressional District, recently announced she will seek reelection in what will become California's 41st Congressional District. That's because Whittier, where she lives, was moved into the new 41st District under the voter-approved Proposition 50 maps. Her move over to the 41st District means her current seat in the 38th District will be filled by a nonincumbent next year.

Of course, the 38th District looks a bit different under the new maps.

The redrawn 38th District sweeps across L.A. County,

The Rams held on, and their fans held their collective breath, as a 61-yard field goal attempt fell short as time ran out Sunday at SoFi Stadium in Inglewood.

The 21-19 win over the Seattle Seahawks propelled the Rams into sole possession of first place in the competitive NFC West.

The University of California and the California Nurses Association reached a tentative four-year agreement for nearly 24,000 nurses that includes "meaningful pay and benefit increases" across the university's 19 medical centers and campuses, the two sides announced Sunday.

As part of the terms of the deal, the CNA canceled its two-day systemwide strike planned for today and Tuesday at UC campuses.

UC nurses will vote on the tentative agreement later this week, the CNA said in a statement.

It's the little expenses that add up, like buying new clothes, shoes, pots and pans or paying for Uber rides.

For the 13,000 households without a home in the aftermath of the Pacific Palisades and Eaton fires of Jan. 7, small consumer expenses can't measure up to the cost of rebuilding or ridding homes of ash and smoke. But these are very real costs that act as speed bumps slowing the drive to recovery.

That's where Wescom Financial, a credit union serving 250,000 people in Southern California, comes in. Through its foundation, the Pasadena-based entity has partnered with ForgiveCo
