

THE HILL

POLITICS & POLICY

Guilfoyle Scandal Proves Too Much for Trump

Just days after a series of reports engulfed Kimberly Guilfoyle in scandal, the White House said it had asked the ambassador to Greece to resign. Sources said President Trump's handling of the situation largely came down to timing: Midterm elections are looming, and Republicans are fighting to keep key seats.

Reporting by Mallory Wilson and Laura Kelly / p.6

Photo / Dimitris Kapantais, SOOC, AFP via Getty Images

Administration

Trump, Vance Signal Unease With Hegseth's Public Execution Plan

The White House has signaled a potential reversal of course after Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth announced plans to livestream the firing squad execution of former Army Maj. Nidal Hasan, the 2009 Fort Hood shooter, prompting bipartisan outcry. President Trump has given his endorsement for executing Hasan by firing squad but said he "wasn't involved in that decision" to livestream the Dec. 3 execution.

Reporting by Ellen Mitchell / p.11

Business

After a Brief Hiatus, Musk Steps Back Into Politics With Redefined DC Role

Elon Musk is jumping back into the political fray, reviving his role as a massive election spender and technology leader with a seat at the table again in Washington. Despite suggesting earlier this year he could pull back on political involvement, Musk's recent election spending makes him the largest campaign donor of 2026 as he tries to give Republicans a boost ahead of the midterms.

Reporting by Miranda Nazzaro / p.16