Hudson police program is modeled after resort areas

The Hudson Police Department has started a pilot program in which non-sworn, unarmed men and women known as “community service officers” will be working in town this summer.

Chief Richard DiPersio said community service officers will help be the “eyes and ears” of the department.

“As chief, my responsibility is to make sure we are using our sworn officers where their training and authority are most needed: responding to emergencies, investigating crimes, community engagement and protecting public safety,” DiPersio said. “During the summer, however, we see a significant increase in activity at highly visited areas such as the Assabet River Rail Trail, the downtown business district and Centennial Beach. Our officers cannot realistically be stationed in those locations at all times while also handling calls for service across town.”

Officer admits to sufficient facts in drunk driving case

The MetroWest Daily News | USA TODAY NETWORK

A Westborough police officer who faced charges of driving and possessing a firearm while drunk has admitted to sufficient facts in court.

William Kearney, 37, was scheduled to go to trial on Friday, Feb. 20, in Worcester District Court. Instead, he admitted to sufficient facts to one count of possession of a firearm while intoxicated and operating a vehicle under the influence of liquor.

Judge Jaclyn Greenhalgh dismissed a charge of driving to endanger and found Kearney not responsible for a marked-lanes violation. An admission to sufficient facts is not an admission of guilt; rather, it is an admission that there's enough evidence for a guilty finding.

Greenhalgh continued the case without a finding for one year. Kearney must complete a driver alcohol safety program and pay $600 in court fees.
