Senate rejects bill to codify the state's emissions goals

Seven Democratic lawmakers side with Republicans to squash Clear Horizons Act

Seven New Mexico Democratic state senators on Wednesday sided with their Republican colleagues and voted down legislation that would have codified emissions reduction goals into state law.

In a 19-23 vote following just over an hour of debate, Senate Bill 18 failed to clear the floor, dashing the hopes of lead sponsor Senate President Pro Tempore Mimi Stewart (D-Albuquerque) to enshrine emission reduction goals into state law based on a 2019 executive order released by Michelle Lujan Grisham. The bill marked Stewart's second effort to pass The Clear Horizons Act, after making several changes to last year's legislation in response to some of its critics.

Republican opponents and lobbyists representing oil and gas, agriculture, construction and chambers of commerce nonetheless remained opposed, and have said the bill would impact the costs of food and fuel and hurt the state's economy.

In a statement issued after the bill failed, the Senate Republican Caucus described the Clear Horizons Act defeat as a "massive victory" and said they were "proud to stand united in our fierce opposition to radical and damaging policies like Senate Bill 18 that seek to destroy our state's lifeline: our vital industries and businesses."

The seven Democratic senators joining Republicans were: Roberto "Bobby" Gonzales from Taos; Shannon Pinto from Tohatchi, George Muñoz of Gallup, Benny Shendo of Jemez Pueblo, Joseph Cervantes of Las Cruces; and Albuquerque's Martin Hickey and Antonio Maestes.

Stewart called the vote's results "disappointing," but said the threat from climate change still looms large.

"New Mexicans are already paying the price of pollution and climate-driven disasters through higher insurance costs, emergency response spending, and rising household expenses," Stewart said in a statement after the vote. "The Clear Horizons Act offered a responsible, transparent plan to reduce those risks and protect families
