Hurricane in El Niño-fueled season raises flooding risks

LOS ANGELES — Hurricane Rachel, currently spinning out in the Pacific Ocean, is expected to raise the risk of coastal flooding in Southern California and could bring widespread rain to the region at some point this weekend and early next week. Forecasters are warning that south-facing beaches such as Long Beach Peninsula, Catalina Island and the coastline from Malibu to Ventura could be particularly at risk of flooding on account of Rachel, the latest named entrant in an unusually active, El Niño-fueled hurricane season. Also contributing to the flood risk is the arrival of a Kelvin wave, another feature of El Niño that can raise sea levels by 6 to 12 inches. The higher the seas, the greater the threat for California’s coastline. See WEATHER 9A

Vance doubts execution plan

But if firing squad death is streamed, VP won’t watch it

HEBRON, Ky. — Vice President JD Vance cast doubt Friday on whether the Pentagon will livestream the execution of Fort Hood shooter Nidal Malik Hasan in December but told reporters that if it is livestreamed, “I’m not going to be watching it.” The Republican vice president said, “I don’t know that that’s actually going to happen,” when asked about the plans that the Pentagon confirmed Thursday. But Vance then tried to set aside the controversy over the plans for a public execution and said Hasan’s crimes should not be forgotten. Hasan was convicted of

Nevadans to decide voter ID question

By Ricardo Torres-Cortez
Las Vegas Review-Journal

The Nov. 3 election could be the last time Nevadans are allowed to vote without presenting identification. A voter ID initiative is included in the midterm ballots that began to ship out this week. Question 7 gives Nevada voters a say on what they want election security to look like moving forward. An affirmative vote on the ballot initiative would enshrine voter ID into Nevada’s Constitution and take effect in time for the 2028 presidential election. See QUESTION 7 10A
