Nine days after a ransomware attack forced Nevada to shut down systems statewide, the Department of Motor Vehicles has reopened its offices and restored many online services.

The DMV announced Tuesday afternoon that MyDMV, its online portal, is back online. Many of the agency's functions have returned. But driver's license, ID card and address-change services remain down.

"We encourage you to please utilize our online resources first before heading to an office," the agency said in a post on X.

Former Sundance Books mansion sold to personal injury law firm

The historic Reno mansion that housed Sundance Books and Music for over a decade has been sold to a personal injury law firm.

Rivera Law Group bought the Levy House, 121 California Ave., from the Nevada Museum of Art in August for $1.275 million, according to the Washoe County Assessor's office. The sale was recorded on Aug. 13.

The Reno Gazette Journal has reached out to Rivera Law Group for comment. An employee confirmed on Tuesday that they plan to move their Reno office into the Levy House.

The fate of the Levy House, which is on the National Register of Historic Places, had been in question since Sundance owner Christine Kelly retired. Sundance was in business for 36 years — the last 13 years at the Levy House — before closing last year in May.

"There's enormous sadness, and I feel incredibly fortunate," Kelly said at the time. "It's hard to leave, but it's time for a new chapter."

"With the opening of our 50,000-square-foot expansion, combined with inquiries from parties expressing interest in purchasing, we decided this is a good time to pass the building along to a new owner with a fresh vision for its best use."

Reno City Council member Kathleen Taylor announced her campaign Tuesday for mayor in 2026.

With Reno Mayor Hillary Schieve unable to run again because of term limits, many candidates are expected to join the race.

Right now, Taylor joins Kate Marshall as the only other candidate to officially declare they're running for Reno mayor so far.

Taylor serves as Reno's vice mayor and represents Ward 1 covering east-central Reno including downtown, the university and the Nevada Cares Campus.
