She wasn't worried. • Newly trained astronaut Judith A. Resnik was a special guest in 1979 when the NASA Lewis Research Center in Cleveland celebrated the 10th anniversary of the Apollo 11 moon landing. • The 30-year-old engineer told interviewers that she eagerly awaited the launch of space shuttles and looked forward to a time when space flights would become routine and "no longer front-page news." • Resnik said the "gee-whiz aspect" of the NASA program was "about over," and she didn't foresee any unpleasant surprises. • "We know everything about everything about the shuttle," she said. • Then she smiled and added: "Hopefully." • This month marks the 40th anniversary of Resnik's death aboard the space shuttle Challenger. She and six crewmates were killed Jan. 28, 1986, when the vessel exploded shortly after liftoff at Cape Canaveral, Florida. See RESNIK, Page 4A

MINNEAPOLIS — President Donald Trump on Jan. 27 repeatedly said Alex Pretti, who was fatally shot by a Border Patrol agent over the weekend, should not have been carrying a gun at a protest — a sentiment that's drawn the ire of some Republicans and gun rights groups.

Videos show Pretti holding his phone when he approached federal agents, not brandishing or reaching for his firearm, which he had a permit to carry. Footage also indicates that an agent confiscated Pretti's gun seconds before he was shot and killed.

Trump's comments come as his administration grapples with outrage over the shooting and his administration's response to it. Trump said he will be
