Kotek vs. Drazan: Governor's race starts in earnest

Anastasia Mason
Salem Statesman Journal
USA TODAY NETWORK

Oregonians will have familiar candidates to choose between in the November election when Gov. Tina Kotek and Sen. Christine Drazan, R-Canby, face off again to be Oregon's governor.

Kotek, who swept her nine challengers and declared victory minutes after initial results were released on May 19, wants to keep her place at Mahonia Hall and serve a second term.

Polling from earlier this year showed Kotek as the sixth most unpopular governor in the nation, despite her resounding primary victory.

Drazan bested 13 other Republicans, leading her closest competition, Rep. Ed Diehl, R-Scio, by about 8 percentage points as of May 22. The Associated Press and The Oregonian called the race for Drazan the evening of May 19.

In her first term, Kotek has prioritized behavioral health, education and housing and homelessness and launched a business initiative aimed at making the state more economically competitive.

Meanwhile, Drazan was reelected to the legislature in 2024 and again served as House Minority Leader, leading the Republican representatives. She was appointed to the Senate in October 2025, shortly before launching her campaign for governor.

Drazan and Kotek will have the chance to rehash their 2022 competition and everything that has come since.

Beyond their broader backgrounds, this year's race is different because of President Donald Trump and the lack of a prominent third-party candidate.

Kotek's reelection announcement positioned her as a protector of Oregon against the federal government and highlighted ongoing progress on her priority issues.

Drazan, like her Republican opponents, has largely avoided Trump and national politics thus far. She said May 19 her campaign would focus on everyday issues and appealing to a broader audience, with the ultimate goal being to "fire Tina Kotek."
