The Carnegie Science Center in Pittsburgh is preparing to make its name change official. The center will be closed to the public from Sept. 2-12 to make its final preparations to reopen on Sept. 13 as the Daniel G. and Carole L. Kamin Science Center, aka the Kamin Science Center, according to an Aug. 6 announcement. A (Re)Launch Day celebration on Sept. 13 features free general admission from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., live science demonstrations, music, interactive exhibits, giveaways and a first look at new exhibits planned for the Kamin Science Center in the next two years. The Pirate Parrot and the pierogies are also expected to make an appearance
