Who wins, loses in the $50.1B PA budget

Matthew Rink and Bethany Rodgers
USA TODAY NETWORK – PENNSYLVANIA

Pennsylvania lawmakers reached a deal on a state budget on Wednesday, Nov. 12, to end a four-month stalemate that held up critical funding to school districts, local governments and other agencies.

After reaching a deal with Gov. Josh Shapiro, the Pennsylvania House of Representatives voted 156-47 on the $50.1 billion spending plan. The GOP-controlled Pennsylvania Senate followed suit, approving the budget bill 40-9.

Neither Democrats nor Republicans came out as clear victors in the nearly 20-week budget battle, which extended well past the June 30 state-mandated deadline. Democrats secured reforms to cyber charter school funding to ease the burden those schools place on public districts, while Republicans forced the state's exit from the Regional Beginning and ending life as a Christmas tree, York's annual 38-foot evergreen Christmas icon made its way to Continental Square Nov. 12.

The tree spent most of its life growing up with the Reigart family on South Findlay Street in Springettsbury Township where it was planted in the front yard during the early 1970s, Donald Reigart II said, adding that the tree was purchased by his father-in-law as a live Christmas tree. Their property was too crowded with plantings, so it was planted on his front lawn when it was about 5 feet tall and thrived.

In retrospect, Reigart said that he wished that he had planted it farther from the house as over the years an opening in the wide spreading bottom branches was cut to reach the front door. With its curved evergreen opening and sprawling dark interior, the sturdy, straight tree would have made a good home for elves during its later years.

Reigart said that his children, who grew up with the tree, were more upset at its passing than he was. He knew it eventually needed to come down and was happy to see it end life as part of
