If you love Pennsylvania barns and preserving the state's heritage, there is a new specialty license plate featuring a graphic of a Pennsylvania bank barn.

The Pennsylvania Department of Transportation and the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission announced April 7 that Pennsylvanians may now purchase the newly designed "Preserve Our Heritage" special fund plate featuring the Pennsylvania Bank Barn and the Liberty Bell. The plate follows the design language of the new Pennsylvania license plate.

"For centuries, the iconic stone foundations and cantilevered forebays of the Pennsylvania Bank Barn have stood as steadfast symbols of our state's deep agricultural roots," said Andrea Lowery, executive director of the Pennsylvania Historical & Museum Commission. "These structures were built to last, perfectly integrated into the hillsides of our Commonwealth. Placing this historic cornerstone on our new license plates is a wonderful way for Pennsylvanians to celebrate and carry a piece of our shared, enduring history wherever the road takes them."

The special fund license plate is available for cars or trucks with a registered gross weight of not more than 14,000 pounds. Each plate costs $64, with $23 going directly to support the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission's education and exhibit programs. Pennsylvanians who are interested in ordering this new plate can documents filed by the Adams County District Attorney's Office on Wednesday, April 8, 2026.

Those charges were filed in addition to prior charges issued in Straban Township on Friday, March 13, court records show.

Across the two separate investigations, police have filed charges alleging at least four separate individuals were victims of Carr, according to the documents.

Carr, who posted a monetary bail of $100,000 on the March charges on March 17 through a bondsman, is awaiting arraignment on the new charges, court records show.

Court dates, and bail, have not yet been set for the April charges. Lawyer information for Carr in the new case was not immediately available.

Carr, who began his term as the mayor of Gettysburg in January of 2026, submitted his resignation to the municipality on Tuesday, March 3,
