

South Carolina travels to face No. 3 Texas A&M

SPORTS, 1C

The Greenville News

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 2025 | GREENVILLEONLINE.COM

PART OF THE USA TODAY NETWORK

Women wait for a medical consultation at a health center in Bogo, Cameroon, on Sept. 2.

Officials: U.S. aid cuts curtail malaria fight

Babies die in Cameroon amid shortage of medicine, health workers

Amindeh Blaise Atabong, Robbie Corey-Boulet and Jennifer Rigby
REUTERS

BOGO, Cameroon – Nine-month-old baby Mohamat burned with fever for three days before his family took him to the closest health center in northern Cameroon, but it was too late. He died of malaria that day.

Mohamat’s death was part of a spike this year in malaria fatalities that local health officials attribute to foreign aid cuts by the United States.

Before the cuts, Mohamat might have been diagnosed earlier by one of more than 2,000 U.S.-funded community health workers who would travel over rough dirt roads to reach the region’s remotest villages.

And at the health center, he might have been treated with injectable artesunate, a life-saving drug for severe malaria paid for by U.S. funds that is now in short supply. But the center had none to give out.

Reuters traveled to northern Cameroon – where the United States had played a leading role in the malaria response for nearly a decade – to document how the sudden cuts are contributing to delayed malaria diagnoses, inadequate treatment and a growing number of deaths. This story is based on interviews with more than 20 doctors, nurses, community health workers, residents and former U.S. officials involved

A worker unloads boxes of the drug artesunate in a warehouse in Maroua, Cameroon, on Sept. 2. The life-saving drug for severe malaria, paid for by U.S. funds, is now in short supply. PHOTOS BY DESIRE DANGA ESSIGUE/REUTERS

The Trump administration says it is reforming foreign aid that did not align with its “America First” agenda, and Secretary of State Marco Rubio has said repeatedly that no one has died as a result of the cuts.

in malaria programming.

Mohamat’s father, sorghum and banana farmer Alhadji Madou Goni, is mourning a son he had hoped would one day escape poverty.

“I feel so sad about my loss. I hope no one suffers from this (malaria) again,” Goni, 30, told Reuters as he sat outside his home, his wife next to him holding prayer beads.

“Since there is hardship here, and people don’t have the means, we hope aid comes.”

U.S. malaria program disrupted by cuts, end of USAID

Upon taking office in January, President Donald Trump paused all foreign aid, including the President’s Malaria Initiative, launched in 2005 by

See MALARIA, Page 2A

Reverend Jackson hospitalized with PSP complications

A.J. Jackson

Greenville News
USA TODAY NETWORK – SOUTH CAROLINA

Greenville native and global civil rights activist, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, was admitted to the hospital on Tuesday, Nov. 12, according to information provided by the Rainbow Push Coalition.

The 84-year-old is currently under medical observation for Progressive Supranuclear Palsy (PSP), a neurodegenerative condition he has managed for more than a decade, according to a communication from his longtime social justice organization.

The group confirmed the Rev. Jackson had previously been diagnosed with Parkinson’s disease, and last April, his PSP condition was also confirmed.

“The family appreciates all prayers at this time,” said the statement from Rainbow Push Coalition.

Born in 1941 to Helen Burns and Noah Louis Robinson, the Rev. Jackson’s origins began in Greenville, where he quickly developed into a star orator, scholar, student, and youth community leader.

He is the prized alumnus of the now-defunct and formerly segregated Sterling High School, class of 1959, and locally known as part of “The Greenville Eight,” a group of Black students who protested segregation at libraries throughout Greenville County in 1960.

To the world, the Rev. Jackson is known for his various roles in worldwide social justice efforts, his two presidential campaign runs in the mid-to-late 1980s, and as the recipient of the Presidential Medal of Freedom honor in 2000.

In South Carolina, the Rev. Jackson has continued his support of local social issues as he was a participant in the Claussen bakery strike of 1967 alongside the support of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., assisted in helping turn MLK Day become a state-recognized holiday in 2006, and a key voice in the removal of the Confederate flag from South Carolina’s state capitol in 2015, and much more.

– A.J. Jackson covers business, the food & dining scene, and downtown culture for The Greenville News. Contact him by email at ajackson@gannett.com, and follow him on X (formerly Twitter) @aj-happened. This coverage is only possible with support from our readers. Sign up today for a digital subscription.

Epstein trashed former friend Trump in emails

Josh Meyer
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON – “Dirty.” “(Expletive) crazy.” “Borderline insane.” A Mafia don but with the “great dangerous power” of being America’s president and commander-in-chief.

That’s how the late Jeffrey Epstein described his former longtime friend and confidant Donald Trump, according to a trove of the convicted sex offender’s texts and emails released Nov. 12 by the House Oversight Committee.

But perhaps the most intriguing thing Epstein said about Trump in the 20,000-plus pages of emails provided by his estate was this:

See EPSTEIN, Page 3A

Subscriber-only eNewspaper

The eNewspaper is an electronic copy of your print newspaper. Enjoy every page by going to greenvilleonline.com/enewspaper or scan this code on your mobile device. You will also find late news and sports in the bonus sections. Check it out today!

151st year | No. 227
Subscribe 800-736-7136
Printed on recycled paper
©2025 $3.50

