Graham memorialized in emotional ceremony

USA TODAY NETWORK

Senators, representatives and Vice President JD Vance memorialized South Carolina Sen. Lindsey Graham in an emotional ceremony in the Capitol Rotunda that left some relatives and lawmakers in tears after officials recalled his tenacity in public debate and his good humor. • Graham had been a central figure in Congress during more than 31 years in the House and Senate. He was perennially in the middle of complex debates over immigration and budgeting from his roles leading the Judiciary and Budget committees. He also served 33 years in uniform as a lawyer in the Air Force, the Air National Guard and the reserves. • For additional coverage of Lindsey Graham services on July 29, go to greenvillonline.com.

Cyberattack disrupts AnMed services

USA TODAY NETWORK – SOUTH CAROLINA

A cybersecurity attack has forced AnMed to close some offices and modify patient services as the Anderson-based health system works to recover from a network disruption caused by malware. According to a press release, the healthcare system is working diligently with third-party cybersecurity specialists and state and federal authorities to restore its systems. The malware attack disrupted its network, forcing temporary closures and changes to some patient services as the health system works to restore operations. Hospital officials said they are investigating the attack with the help of third-party cybersecurity experts and state and federal authorities. The health system did not immediately provide details about the type of malware involved or whether patient information was affected.

Hospital leaders said patient safety remains the top priority as decisions about procedures, patient transfers, diversions and daily operations are made during the response. The following services are expected to remain open:

- AnMed Urgent Care locations
- AnMed Kids Care
- AnMed Integrated Therapy locations
- AnMed Laboratory Services

Any other location is expected to be closed on Monday, July 27. The hospital system released a regularly updated list of locations that are closed. AnMed said it is coordinating with emergency medical services, regional hospitals and public safety partners to ensure patients continue receiving care at the most appropriate locations while systems are restored. The health system thanked its employees and regional healthcare partners for helping maintain patient care during the disruption. Additional updates, including any changes to operations in the coming days, will be released as more information becomes available.

How to view the biggest meteor shower of the year in Upstate SC

Iris Seaton and Joyce Orlando
USA TODAY NETWORK – SOUTH CAROLINA

One of the world's favorite meteor showers has returned and viewing conditions are expected to be perfect in Upstate South Carolina this week as clear skies return after a stormy weekend. The Perseid meteor shower is considered one of the most spectacular yearly showers observable from the U.S. Additionally, its timing during the summer months offers stargazers more comfortable viewing options than some of the most active winter showers. NASA says that 50-100 meteors can be observed hourly during much of the Perseids' duration. This year, a new moon is expected during the peak of the Perseids meteor shower.

If you're hoping to make a wish, or simply observe yet another incredible cosmic display, here's what to know about viewing the Perseids in Upstate South Carolina.
